

WHY a CCP???

The Institute for Certification of Computing Professionals (ICCP) would like to ensure you, as a Human Resource practitioner or as an Information Systems/Information and Communications Technology (ICT) manager, are aware about the Certified Computing Professional of the USA (CCP) designation.

The CCP is an ICCP-administered designation awarded to IS/ICT professionals. Employers can be assured that all IS/ICT professionals who hold the CCP designation possess a number of years of experience and education in the industry and have demonstrated a commitment to professional ethics and standards of conduct.

As an employer, recognition of the CCP designation demonstrates the high value your organization places on professional qualifications. In today's global economy, success for companies depends on professionals acquiring and maintaining internationally accepted standards. CCP holders meet the highest standards of practice and are the best-qualified candidates. Employers and clients know that they can expect professional conduct, accountable service and knowledge of the latest and best practices from every CCP holder. (CCP holders are required to re-certify every year.)

The CCP designation was introduced in 1973 by ICCP and now through it's sister designation I.S.P. in Canada introduced in 1989 recognized, through legislation, as a registered professional designation in the provinces of Alberta, Ontario, British Columbia and New Brunswick. Criteria for the designation are supported by an internationally accepted skills-structure.

Why not add the following requirement to your company's future IS/ICT job postings: "pursuit or possession of the Certified Computing Professional designation preferred." When you do so, we will recognize your company in the "Standards" section of the ICCP International Web site as a supporter of professionalism and the CCP.
